

MATT MITACEK

To me visual communication-in architecture and graphic design-has often been about the challenge of paradoxes; aesthetics vs. functionality or minimalism vs. chaos, and still visual communication is the most transcendental thing I've stumbled upon in life. It's a constant excuse to stay curious, learn something new and to interact with and observe society, media and people in general. And somewhere in between that I focus on the details, the process and keeping it simple.
